

Derek Franklin

In this interview, we wanted to demonstrate how the father/son relationship develops as boys become men. That is why we brought a father and son into the studio with us. One of the best stories we've heard on the entire podcast season was the simple story Derrick tells about the day when he was a little boy and his dad announced that the family was going to start going to church together. Derrick did not understand and was not particularly excited about it but he realizes, in retrospect, it was a decision that changed the course of his family for generations to come. Also in the episode, Derrick and Zack talk about the power of the dinner table. Even with busy lifestyles, they prioritized the meal together in the evening. This episode is a heartwarming story of ordinary people from a small South Georgia town, simply living right and doing things the way they should be done. It is a story of generational blessings and the love a father and son can have for one another.

4 Generations & The Dinner Table